Advertising This spreadsheet helps you compare your monthly budget with actual expenses and can be printed on a single page in portrait orientation. The difference between budget and actual spending is calculated and formatted so that it is easy to find out where the overspend can be. Description To use this template, simply fill in the highlighted numbers with a light blue background (Budget and Actual columns). Some numbers are listed in the Home cost category, for example, but you want to replace these numbers with your own. This type of budget journal is designed to compare the monthly budget with actual revenue and expenditure. You save your desired budget in the Budget column for each category. It represents your goal - you are spend more than this amount. At the end of the month, you save how much you actually spent during the month in the Actual column. For a detailed set of budget categories, see the Household budget journal. Check out our articles on Make Budget and 5 Basic Budgeting Tips if you've just started or new budgeting. The personal monthly budget template is used to set up the calculations in the Difference column so that the negative numbers are bad. The spreadsheet uses an accounting format where negative numbers are in parentheses (115.00) and conditional formatting is used to red-make negative numbers - red means bad in this case. So, if you spend more than you spend on a budget, the value in the Difference column is red to help it stand out as a warning. The Monthly Budget Summary table in the upper-right corner of the worksheet summarizes all your revenue and expenses and calculates your net income minus expenses. If your net is negative, it means you've overspent your monthly budget. Add or Remove Categories: When adding or removing categories, you need to be careful to avoid confusing formulas that are used to calculate totals. After you make the change, you should check the formulas to make sure they are still correct. Related Content Disclaimer: This table and the information on this page are illustrative and educational.
